MAPS IN AMERICAN FACTFINDER

American FactFinder (AFF) has two tools for creating, viewing, printing, and downloading maps:

- Reference Maps - A tool to view the boundaries of census geographies, such as counties, cities and towns, urban areas, congressional districts, census tracts, census blocks, and more.
- Thematic Maps - A tool to view geographic patterns in census data. Thematic Maps are available for Census 2000, the 1990 Census, the Economic Census, and the Population Estimates program.

For guidance in using these mapping tools, see the Creating and Using Maps tutorial.

Using Reference Maps

The reference map shows you selected geographic boundaries for an area along with orienting features, such as roads. To view a reference map, select the geographic area you want to see. You can customize the map by adding different boundaries or features.

The map always starts with a view of the United States, but you can change that by clicking on the area of the map you want to view in more detail, or by selecting a new geography using the geography link at the top of the Reference Map page.

Click 'Quick tips' for assistance in navigating or customizing your map.

Examples of Reference Maps:

Using Thematic Maps

Use thematic maps when you want to see a comparison of statistical data, such as population or median income, displayed in a map format. You can view interesting facts about places by comparing the patterns of shaded areas or colors on the map.

You can change the view of the thematic map by clicking on the area of the map you want to view in more

Rankings and Comparisons Population and Housing Tables (PHC-T Series)

The Census 2000 PHC-T series of tables covers a wide variety of topics, such as race, Hispanic or Latino origin, group quarters, ancestry -- potentially any data obtained from Census 2000. These tables summarize data available through the Census Bureau's American FactFinder database, or present the results of other tabulations of Census 2000 data. A specific tables(s) also may be released as an associated product of a Census 2000 Brief or a Census 2000 Special Report, providing more detail or cross-classification than provided in the published report. The number of tables in this series will grow as additional data from Census 2000 become available.

NOTE: Some tables are too wide to be printed in portrait mode and should instead be printed in landscape mode.

For general questions about these tables and other Census 2000 population data, or for information on obtaining a paper copy of these tables, please telephone the Statistical Information Staff, Population Division on 301-763-2422 or e-mail pop@census.gov.
